How to S-t-r-e-t-c-h the Food Dollar AND Eat Healthy

Vegetables: Fresh, in season are usually the best buy, however, frozen vegetables can be more economical at certain times of year and are always convenient with little waste, it’s good to keep some in the freezer. For maximum nutrition; when preparing fresh vegies: minimise the chopping and cutting, clean skins rather than peeling, don’t soak your vegies and try not to overcook.

Meat, chicken, fish: When you’re buying, compare cost per serving rather than per kilogram as sometimes a moderately priced protein with little or no waste may be more economical than a very cheap one with more gristle, bone or fat. Cheaper cuts are just as nutritious but may need different preparation methods for maximum deliciousness! Using legumes such as lentils, peas and beans (cans are quick) will extend most stews and casseroles; maintain protein content and increasing fibre.

Milk: Powdered (dried) milk contains all the nutrients of fresh milk and it’s very convenient. If you make it up the night before it’s very like fresh in the morning. It’s also very good for using in cooking.
